Q1 Text Solution:

Franz was afraid of going to school that day because M. Hamel had announced there would be a test on participles, and Franz hadn't prepared for it. He admits to himself that he preferred roaming the countryside instead of studying his grammar.

He even thinks about skipping school and enjoying the day outside, but eventually heads to class.

So, the main reason for his fear was:

He hadn't learned his lesson on participles, making

Option B the correct answer.

Q2 Text Solution:

In The Last Lesson, Franz, the narrator, is a little schoolboy who is reluctant to go to school. On the day the story takes place, he is especially hesitant because he hasn't prepared his lesson on participles.

As he walks to school, he's distracted by the sights and sounds around him, which seem more tempting than going to class. Specifically, he mentions:

- The warm, bright weather
- The birds chirping on the trees
- The Prussian soldiers drilling in the open field behind the sawmill

These pleasant and lively scenes tempt him to skip school and spend the day outdoors, rather than face his teacher, M. Hamel.

So, the tempting sights that distracted Franz were:

Birds chirping and soldiers drilling — which makes Option B the correct answer.

Q3 Text Solution:

Franz mentions that for the past two years, ever since the Prussians had started invading and occupying parts of France, the bulletin-board in front of the town hall had become a place people dreaded.

It was used to post official notices, and every time people gathered around it, it usually meant bad news — such as new military orders, conscriptions, or restrictions.

On the day of the last lesson, people had gathered around it again, which added to Franz's sense of unease.

So, the bulletin-board had become associated with:

C. Bad news and military orders.

Q4 Text Solution:

In "The Last Lesson," as Franz was hurrying to school, feeling anxious because he hadn't prepared his lesson on participles, Wachter, the blacksmith, called out from his smithy with a mocking tone and said something like,

"Don't go so fast, boy; you'll get to your school in plenty of time!" This was meant to tease Franz, because he thought Franz was rushing and didn't know about the new order that this would be the last French lesson.
At that point, Franz still didn't know the full seriousness of the day.

Q5 Text Solution:
Franz was late for school and was nervous about getting in trouble, especially since he hadn't prepared his lesson on participles. Normally, the classroom would be noisy at the beginning of the day—with the sound of desks, lessons being repeated, and teacher's ruler tapping on the table. Franz hoped to take advantage of this usual commotion to slip in quietly. However, that day, everything was unusually still and quiet because it was the last French lesson, and the atmosphere was solemn.

Q6 Text Solution:
When Franz arrives at school, he notices something very unusual. Normally, there's a lot of noise – the opening and closing of desks, lessons being repeated loudly, the teacher's ruler tapping on the desk. But on that day, the classroom is unusually quiet.
Franz says:

> "It was all so still! I had counted on the commotion to get to my desk without being seen; but, of course, that day everything had to be as quiet as Sunday morning."

This Sunday-like silence and solemnity reflects the seriousness of the occasion — it was the last French lesson, as the German authorities had ordered that only German would be taught in schools from the next day.
So, the unusual thing about the classroom that day was its quiet, serious atmosphere, which makes:
Option C the correct answer.

Video Solution:

Q7 Text Solution:
When Franz arrived late, he was surprised that M. Hamel did not scold or punish him. Instead, M. Hamel spoke to him gently and told him to go to his seat. This kind and unusual behavior was part of the emotional atmosphere of the day—it was M. Hamel's last French lesson, and he was filled with sadness and regret rather than anger.

Q8 Text Solution:
On the day of the last French lesson, Franz is surprised to see M. Hamel dressed very formally. He is wearing:

"his beautiful green coat, his frilled shirt, and the little black silk cap, all embroidered, that he never wore except on inspection and prize days."

This elegant outfit was unusual for a regular school day and signified the importance of the occasion — it was his last day as a French teacher after 40 years of service.
So, the correct answer is:
B. His finest clothes usually worn on special days.

Q9 Text Solution:
Franz expected the usual noise and bustle in the classroom. But instead, he found the room unusually quiet and solemn. What truly surprised him the most was seeing the village elders—such as old Hauser—sitting quietly at the back benches, which were usually empty. They were there to honor M. Hamel and show respect for their mother tongue, French, which was being banned by the Prussian authorities after the annexation of Alsace and Lorraine.
This moment reflects the theme of the story: the value of language, identity, and the regret people feel when they realize the importance of something only after it's gone.
